Columbia Welcomes Local Students as First Class of Thompson-Muñoz Scholars

By Gary Shapiro

Albert Thompson and Carlos Muñoz lived on the same block of West 116th Street and knew each other when they were students at Columbia College. Last fall, the two men met again when they attended a reception for local students chosen to receive scholarships named in their honor.

The new Thompson-Muñoz Scholars Program identifies up to 40 promising undergraduates from Upper Manhattan and the South Bronx every year. These students receive need-based scholarships to Columbia, as well as support and encouragement through various program activities.

Albert Thompson (CC’54), a Columbia shot put record-holder who continued his track-and-field career in the Naval Reserves, graduated from both Columbia College and the College of Dental Medicine, where he is now an assistant clinical professor. Carlos Muñoz (CC’57, MA’61) likewise earned a pair of degrees from the University, graduating from the College before getting a master’s degree in economics. He climbed to executive vice president for credit and risk management at Dime Savings Bank of New York; both were active alumni.

"Columbia is defined by … our commitment to providing educational opportunity to a remarkable diversity of young people, regardless of their family’s income,” Columbia President Lee C. Bollinger said. “We are proud to add the Thompson-Muñoz Scholars to this effort that’s so central to our mission.”

Thompson told the students that while they deserved to be commended for getting into Columbia, they didn’t do it alone. “Your parents deserve credit for providing an environment for you to succeed,” he said. And going forward, he said later, they will have to help each other. “The biggest asset that all of these students have is one another.”

A version of this story originally appeared in the December 2014 edition of The Record.

Columbia-Harlem Small Business Development Center Helping Local Entrepreneurs Thrive

By Ernest Beck

When Sam Morjaria opened his physical therapy practice in 2007, on the ground floor of a Harlem brownstone, he was pretty much on his own facing a multitude of business start-up issues. "Like many small business owners, you have to figure things out by yourself, and it can be a very lonely place,” Morjaria says. His business, Park North Physical Therapy, has flourished since then with some help from the Columbia-Harlem Small Business Development Center (CHSBDC), a public-private partnership that provides free workshops, training programs, and intensive one-on-one counseling to small business owners in Upper Manhattan.

Founded in 2009 with the help of Government and Community Affairs staffer Flores Forbes, CHSBDC is funded in part by the United States Small Business Administration and located at the Columbia Business School, a setup that allows business people in the community access to the University’s faculty, students, and alumni. So far, the Center has worked directly with almost 1,500 businesses from river to river above 96th Street, helping them to invest over $9 million and create or save 716 jobs. “Small businesses are more likely to create jobs and employ people at fair wages if they are also growing businesses,” explains Kaaryn Nailor Simmons, the director of CHSBDC, who grew up in Harlem. (continued on page 3)
COLUMBIA PROFESSOR DIOUF HONORED BY FRENCH GOVERNMENT

Mamadou Diouf, Columbia professor and the director of the Institute for African Studies, has been named a Chevalier of the French Legion of Honor. Diouf was singled out for his role in engaging students from around the world in the study and history of current affairs. Diouf is the cofounder and leader of the Joint African Studies Program at Columbia, a transatlantic initiative between Columbia, Paris I, and Sciences Po that enables French and American students to earn a dual certificate from both Columbia and Paris I while exploring diverse approaches to African studies. The Order of the Legion of Honor is the highest award bestowed by the French government; it was founded by Napoleon Bonaparte to recognize outstanding achievement in the military as well as in the public and private sectors.

COLUMBIA ANNOUNCES FIRST ANNUAL GLOBAL FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION PRIZE WINNERS

Columbia University’s inaugural Global Freedom of Expression Prizes have been awarded to the Constitutional Court of Turkey, the Constitutional Court of Zimbabwe, and the Media Legal Defence Initiative (MLDI). The awards, established earlier this year by University President Lee C. Bollinger, recognize judicial decisions and legal representation around the world that strengthen freedom of expression by promoting international legal norms.

MLDI garnered the “Excellence in Legal Services” award, which honors lawyers, academics, or NGOs for a legal brief, amicus brief, or academic article that contributes to the defense of freedom of expression. Decision of the Constitutional Court of Turkey and the Constitutional Court of Zimbabwe were recognized in the “Significant Legal Ruling” category. The awards were made at the conclusion of Columbia’s recent Global Freedom of Expression and Information conference.

SUSANNE GOLDBERG NAMED TO HEAD NEW UNIVERSITY LIFE OFFICE

Columbia President Lee C. Bollinger has appointed Professor of Law Susanne B. Goldberg to the new position of Executive Vice President for University Life. Goldberg, who joined the faculty in 2006, is also a founder and director of Columbia Law School’s Center for Gender and Sexuality Law. Since July 2014, Goldberg has served as President Bollinger’s special advisor on sexual assault prevention and response.

“She possesses the demonstrated ability to thoughtfully and sensitively engage virtually every member of the University in service of improving our ability to respond to complex issues,” Bollinger said. The mission of the new Office of the Executive Vice President for University Life will be to further the academic and community experience of students, faculty, and staff at Columbia.

Former Columbia Administrator Appointed to Lead New NYC Sustainability Office

Mayor Bill de Blasio has appointed Nilda Mesa as the director of New York City’s new Office of Sustainability, which spearheads the administration’s environmental and sustainability initiatives, including aspects of PlaNYC. Before joining the de Blasio administration last year, Mesa was known to many in the University community for her work as Columbia’s first sustainability office administrator. As the de Blasio administration’s environmental and sustainability initiatives, one of two city offices that were merged as head of the NYC Mayor’s Office of Environmental Coordination, one of two city offices that were merged to form the one she now leads. Previously, Mesa served in the Clinton Administration as the associate director of the White House Council on Environmental Quality. She also served as counsel to the NAFTA Taskforce at the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, where she led negotiations with Canada and Mexico related to trade and the environment. She has a J.D. from Harvard University and a B.A. from Northwestern University.

“Climate change poses nothing short of an existential threat to New Yorkers and our planet,” Mayor de Blasio said. “I am thrilled to have Nilda on board to make our ambitious, vital policies a reality.”

Mamadou Diouf

COLUMBIA SCIENTISTS TAKE ON EBOLA IN WEST AFRICA

As Ebola dominated the news, Jeffrey Shaman, an associate professor of environmental health sciences at Columbia’s Mailman School of Public Health, led a team of researchers on a mission to create a computer model that would track and forecast the growth of cases in West Africa, the epicenter of the disease. The tools they developed provide status updates on the virus’s strength in West Africa and forecast cumulative infections and deaths six weeks in advance. Even at panic about Ebola has subsided in the United States, Shama’s group, along with other researchers from Mailman and the Columbia University Medical Center, continues its efforts to provide local and global authorities with a scientific basis for their policies and response strategies.

Students from the After School Youth Employment Program at Creative Art Works worked with Columbia undergraduates to paint a pair of colorful murals depicting the rich history of West Harlem; the Manhattanville Diptychs have been on public display at Columbia-affiliated Teachers College (Anthony Gonzales, Creative Art Works).

Nilda Mesa, Director of the NYC Office of Sustainability

Mamadou Diouf

THE COLUMBIA NEWSLETTER

309 Low Library
535 W. 116th St., MC 4199
New York, NY 10027

The Columbia Newsletter is published by the Office of Government and Community Affairs.

Maxine Griffith
Executive Vice President for Government and Community Affairs and Special Advisor for Campus Planning

Karen Jewett
Vice President for Government and Community Affairs

Editorial Coordinator: Kevin Brannon

To receive a copy of The Columbia Newsletter, contact the Office of Government and Community Affairs at 212-854-2871 or send an email to communitynewsletter@columbia.edu.
Joseph Bacani, veteran and Columbia General Studies student, at the dedication of the disabled veterans memorial that bears his image.

Former Obama Advisor Directs SIPA Center on Energy Policy

By Georgette Jasen

Jason Bordoff, a former member of the White House staff and a top energy policy expert, started learning about the industry at an early age. His father and grandfather owned gas and auto service stations in Brooklyn when he was growing up. His mother emigrated from the Middle East to the United States with her family as a teenager.

"I kind of joke that one side of my family is from where the energy was produced and the other side delivered it to drivers," says Bordoff.

After four years in the Obama administration, most recently as special assistant to the president and senior director for energy and climate change at the National Security Council, Bordoff joined Columbia in January 2013 as founding director of the Center on Global Energy Policy and professor of professional practice at the School of International and Public Affairs.

"There is nothing like working in the White House. It was an extraordinary experience and a privilege," he says. "I was starting to think about doing something else and was incredibly excited about what Columbia was looking to build in the area of energy policy research."

In less than two years, the Center has become a leading global venue for high-level discussions and research about energy. Speakers have included senior policy makers and CEOs of multinational energy companies such as Shell and Conoco. In addition to publishing research papers about the intersection of energy, economics, geopolitics, and the environment, the Center has also launched a Women in Energy program to support women interested in entering the field. The program invites women executives in the energy sector to speak and offers opportunities for students to network with them informally.

Bordoff also teaches a course in U.S. energy policy at SIPA and is supervising several capstone projects, in which a team of students does a research paper and presents it to a real-world client seeking to solve a particular problem. Former senior government officials and policy experts who have joined the Center as fellows also teach and do research.

"Energy is a pressing global policy issue—it must be engaged from economic, geopolitical, and environmental perspectives—and we are proud to have Jason adding to SIPA’s leadership in the field," said Merit Janow, dean of the School of International and Public Affairs. Bordoff, who is a regular commentator in the media, put that thought leadership on display when he appeared on one of the final episodes of The Colbert Report to explain the impact of falling oil prices.

During his years in the White House, Bordoff never imagined the advantages of building a policy center of this type outside of D.C. "Columbia has the intellectual traditions and the resources to support and honor military families. Michelle Obama to encourage all Americans to find ways to support and honor military families.

At Columbia, Bordoff is studying psychology, learning about PTSD and trauma, which could be subjects for later research. "There are so many possibilities now," he says. Whatever his career after graduation, Bacani says he wants to devote his life to serving others. "I was spared," he says. "I have to pay it back."

A version of this story originally appeared in the December 2014 edition of The Record.

Former Obama Advisor Directs SIPA Center on Energy Policy

By Georgette Jasen

Jason Bordoff, a former member of the White House staff and a top energy policy expert, started learning about the industry at an early age. His father and grandfather owned gas and auto service stations in Brooklyn when he was growing up. His mother emigrated from the Middle East to the United States with her family as a teenager.

"I kind of joke that one side of my family is from where the energy was produced and the other side delivered it to drivers," says Bordoff.

After four years in the Obama administration, most recently as special assistant to the president and senior director for energy and climate change at the National Security Council, Bordoff joined Columbia in January 2013 as founding director of the Center on Global Energy Policy and professor of professional practice at the School of International and Public Affairs.

"There is nothing like working in the White House. It was an extraordinary experience and a privilege," he says. "I was starting to think about doing something else and was incredibly excited about what Columbia was looking to build in the area of energy policy research."

In less than two years, the Center has become a leading global venue for high-level discussions and research about energy. Speakers have included senior policy makers and CEOs of multinational energy companies such as Shell and Conoco. In addition to publishing research papers about the intersection of energy, economics, geopolitics, and the environment, the Center has also launched a Women in Energy program to support women interested in entering the field. The program invites women executives in the energy sector to speak and offers opportunities for students to network with them informally.

Bordoff also teaches a course in U.S. energy policy at SIPA and is supervising several capstone projects, in which a team of students does a research paper and presents it to a real-world client seeking to solve a particular problem. Former senior government officials and policy experts who have joined the Center as fellows also teach and do research.

"Energy is a pressing global policy issue—it must be engaged from economic, geopolitical, and environmental perspectives—and we are proud to have Jason adding to SIPA’s leadership in the field," said Merit Janow, dean of the School of International and Public Affairs. Bordoff, who is a regular commentator in the media, put that thought leadership on display when he appeared on one of the final episodes of The Colbert Report to explain the impact of falling oil prices.

During his years in the White House, Bordoff never imagined the advantages of building a policy center of this type outside of D.C. "Columbia has the intellectual traditions and the resources to support and honor military families. Michelle Obama to encourage all Americans to find ways to support and honor military families.

At Columbia, Bordoff is studying psychology, learning about PTSD and trauma, which could be subjects for later research. "There are so many possibilities now," he says. Whatever his career after graduation, Bacani says he wants to devote his life to serving others. "I was spared," he says. "I have to pay it back."

A version of this story originally appeared in the December 2014 edition of The Record.

General Studies Student Graces New Disabled Veterans Memorial

By Georgette Jasen

By Georgette Jasen

I felt a special compassion for these young men with torn-up faces. The wounds one could see were often less severe than the psychological injuries they brought with them. My heart went out to each of them.

C.J. Heatley

Joseph Bacani likes to be alone on Veterans Day, to reflect on his time in Iraq and the friends who died there. “It’s still raw, even though it has been more than seven years,” he says.

Now a student at Columbia’s School of General Studies, Bacani was a 21-year-old Army private in March 2007 when he was shot through the pelvis by a sniper while on foot patrol in Baghdad searching for improvised explosive devices (IEDs).

Unable to walk because of neurological damage, and suffering from post-traumatic stress, Bacani returned to the United States for treatment. Grueling rehabilitation devices (IEDs).

Five men in his platoon died in Iraq and another died after returning home. Bacani says he is always thinking of them, especially his best friend, Darrell Shippy, who was 25 when he was killed by an IED in January 2007. “They never got to experience the life I have,” Bacani says. “My drive is to live for them.”

“We are immensely proud” that Bacani was chosen to be included in the memorial, said Peter Ann, dean of the School of General Studies. “Like so many of his veteran colleagues, Joseph has overcome extraordinary physical and personal challenges, becoming in the process an even more reflective human being and committed Columbia student.”

The School of General Studies was originally created in 1947 specifically for nontraditional students, especially veterans returning from service in World War II. Today, Bacani is one of nearly 600 student-veterans now at Columbia.

Columbia’s special efforts to welcome Iraq- and Afghanistan-era veterans into the student body have gained national attention in recent years. In April 2010, then-Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Admiral Mike Mullen said of the University’s support for veterans, “I believe that investment on the part of America and Columbia will be paid back tenfold over the course of the next decade.” Last year, Dr. Jill Biden met with student military veterans as part of Joining Forces, the initiative she started with First Lady Michelle Obama to encourage all Americans to find ways to support and honor military families.

At Columbia, Bacani is studying psychology, learning about PTSD and trauma, which could be subjects for later research. “There are so many possibilities now,” he says. Whatever his career after graduation, Bacani says he wants to devote his life to serving others. “I was spared,” he says. “I have to pay it back.”

A version of this story originally appeared in the December 2014 edition of The Record.
Columbia Hosts Alumna Gale Brewer’s First State of the Borough Address

By Gary Shapiro and Georgette Jasen

On a recent Sunday afternoon, Manhattan residents gathered in Columbia’s Roone Arledge Auditorium to hear Gale A. Brewer deliver her first State of the Borough address. An alumna of Columbia’s School of General Studies, Brewer completed her first year as Manhattan’s 27th borough president in January. Columbia’s own Maxine Griffiths introduced Brewer and praised her many years of service to the city.

In attendance was New York congressman Chuck Schumer, who applauded Brewer’s past year’s work. “She understands the problems facing our borough,” he said. “(Manhattan) has been a lot better this year now that she has been in office.” He went on to address Brewer’s efforts to keep the American dream alive by supporting the working class, providing affordable housing, and assisting immigrants.

Brewer chose to forge the traditional speech format in favor of an interactive community conversation. She involved Manhattan leaders on stage to engage with her in meaningful dialogue on issues ranging from education and technology to neighborhood development and affordable housing. Two screens displaying tweets of audience-generated real-time feedback bookended the stage and encouraged participation from the public.

Brewer’s panel consisted of four speakers who represented Manhattan’s diverse community interests: Ruth Messinger, Manhattan borough president from 1990 to 1997 and current president of the American Jewish World Service; Carl McCall, New York State comptroller from 1993 to 2002 and current chairman of the State University of New York (SUNY) Board of Trustees; Jaime Estades, president of the Latino Leadership Institute; and Gigi Li, chair of Community Board 3, the advisory board for the district encompassing Chinatown and the Lower East Side.

In keeping with the university setting, the discussion focused on education and youth. McCall spoke about the virtues of the SUNY system’s affordability but noted its limited success in solving the city’s most pervasive education challenges. Ironically, SUNY supplies 40 percent of teachers,” he said, noting that only 20 percent of New York high school graduates are prepared for college. He acknowledged that SUNY’s and CUNY’s strategies for cultivating leaders should be modeled “to end the cycle of miseducation and remediation.”

The conversation continued to technology’s role in education and the modern classroom. The panel agreed that technology is a useful tool, especially for STEM learning, but that lower income students are at a disadvantage due to a lack of access to technology in their homes. Estades advocated for the eventual implementation of a public Wi-Fi infrastructure, while Li suggested that such resources already exist on a smaller scale through the public library system. Both recognized, however, that there are problems inherent in Manhattan’s vast wealth disparity.

In keeping with the university setting, the discussion focused on education and youth. McCall spoke about the virtues of the SUNY system’s affordability but noted its limited success in solving the city’s most pervasive education challenges. Ironically, SUNY supplies 40 percent of teachers,” he said, noting that only 20 percent of New York high school graduates are prepared for college. He acknowledged that SUNY’s and CUNY’s strategies for cultivating leaders should be modeled “to end the cycle of miseducation and remediation.”

The conversation continued to technology’s role in education and the modern classroom. The panel agreed that technology is a useful tool, especially for STEM learning, but that lower income students are at a disadvantage due to a lack of access to technology in their homes. Estades advocated for the eventual implementation of a public Wi-Fi infrastructure, while Li suggested that such resources already exist on a smaller scale through the public library system. Both recognized, however, that there are problems inherent in Manhattan’s vast wealth disparity.

The panel agreed that the income gap is an issue with broader social implications, especially for the role of affordable housing in the current climate of widespread gentrification. Neighborhood development is reaching a fever pitch, but 70 percent of affordable housing recipients still make under $30,000. Estades suggested that government should incentivize relocation to stimulate economic growth for the working class. McCall added that by leaning to small businesses and the working class, banks could help contribute to job creation. Although there is no perfect solution, Estades recognized that “the blueprint is there” to diminish poverty in the city.

Brewer finished the address by thanking her fellow panelists and encouraging involvement from all Manhattan residents, noting that it is through caring for the individuals in our community that we can create a shared culture.

New Arts and Sciences Deans Plunge Ahead with New Projects

By Gary Shapiro and Georgette Jasen

They supervise academic departments and research centers. They oversee faculty searches and hires. They help guide budget priorities and research funding. But Alondra Nelson and Sharon Marcus, Columbia’s newest divisional deans in the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, are also plunging ahead with exciting new intellectual contributions to their respective fields.

Nelson, who is a professor of sociology and the former director of Columbia’s Institute for Research on Women, Gender, and Sexuality, describes herself as an interdisciplinary social scientist whose academic interests include science and technology, medicine and health, and social movements. In her forthcoming book, The Social Life of DNA: Race, Reparations, and Reconciliation after the Genome, Nelson traces her interest in the political uses of genetic analysis to a 2002 class-action lawsuit. The plaintiffs in the case sought reparations from several corporations that they claimed profited from slavery. When the suit was dismissed for lack of standing in 2004, the plaintiffs turned to genetic ancestry testing to prove that they were descended from slaves.

“Genetic information is changing how we think about belonging, about the past and the present,” Nelson says. “It tells us things about ourselves that are very individual and also that we are all part of an overlapping, interwoven human family.”

She notes that genetic analysis has been used in Argentina to help relatives identify the remains of those who disappeared during the military dictatorship of 1976–83, in South Africa to identify victims of apartheid, and in New York after the discovery of an African burial ground in lower Manhattan.

Nelson herself underwent genetic ancestry testing and discovered she is related to the Bamileke people of Cameroon. “That ethnic specificity was never a burning question for me,” she says. “But people I encountered while carrying out my research kept asking about this. It became a credibility issue.”

Marcus is a scholar of 19th century French and English literature whose current research focuses on theatrical celebrity. She is exploring the concept of theatrical fame in the 19th century, a period when mass media came to the fore. “The invention of photography brought images of performers, monarchs, politicians, and military leaders within the reach of millions of avid fans,” Marcus says. “People with unprecedented amounts of leisure time flocked to see performers who, for the first time, could travel the world by steamship and rail.”

Marcus is intrigued by celebrity because it engenders so much controversy and debate. The public loves celebrities, hates them, and argues about whether they deserve their fame. “Some celebrities are paragons of good behavior, others shamelessly defy convention,” she says.

Her interest can be traced to her childhood, in the 1970s, when her father would take her to see classic films with stars such as Katharine Hepburn and Humphrey Bogart. She spent as much time watching movies and reading film history as reading novels. “I memorized an entire book about the Academy Awards when I was 7,” says Marcus, who can still tell you who won Oscars in the 1940s.

Nowadays, film is one of many subjects that Marcus covers in a lively online review she co-founded called Public Books, written by scholars, artists, and intellectuals and aimed at a wide audience. It was recently chosen by the website Flavorwire as one of the top five new literary publications to watch.

Marcus’s roles as dean, teacher, and editor leave her limited time to complete her book on celebrity. “I’ve always advised my graduate students to make sure to write one page a day, five pages a week, if they want to finish their dissertations,” she says, adding, “Now, I’m trying to take my own advice.”

A version of this story originally appeared in the December 2014 edition of The Record.
In the Mix

Clockwise, from top left:
President Obama with winners of the 2nd annual White House Student Film Festival. Pictured: Jared Cobazo, Chazz Johnson, Janaya Nicholson, David Maxwell, and Ojani Johnson, students from the Digital Media Training Program in Harlem, which is run by award-winning Columbia Journalism adjunct professor Melvin McCray (Courtesy of the White House).

Columbia University Libraries and Ambassador Jean Kennedy Smith presented the 2015 Edward M. Kennedy Prize for Drama Inspired by American History to Suzan-Lori Parks for Father Comes Home from the Wars, Parts 1, 2, & 3. Parks and Steven Bargonetti (CC’78), the show’s musical director, performed songs from the play at Columbia University’s Italian Academy (Diane Bondareff).

David N. Dinkins, Columbia professor and former mayor of New York City, makes his stage debut in Mandela, at the National Black Theatre (Courtesy of David N. Dinkins).

Hundreds of people held aloft glowing lanterns honoring African-American artist Romare Bearden during the third annual Morningside Lights procession (The Record).

In the Mix
Programs are designed for existing businesses and for entrepreneurs interested in getting a new business off the ground. They are mostly start-ups, the majority in retail trade—including online retail—as well as professional consulting services. Increasingly, food manufacturing and food service businesses are also seeking help with business planning, legal referrals, marketing, and funding.

For the most part, Nailor Simmons says, these business owners know about their particular industry, but they often lack formal business training. Through the Center, they have access to resources at Columbia, including business and law school faculty. There are skills training courses and sessions with experts in finance, marketing, social media, and other topics.

In addition, 20 business owners are selected each year to enroll in the Center’s Columbia Community Business Program, a two-year executive education program. Morjaria is now in his second year in the program. “There are not a lot of places a small business owner can go to get these resources and to find someone to help you,” he says. Another benefit is the interaction between other owners. “We are all in the same boat, trying to be the best we can at what we do and learning from each other,” he adds.

Helping Local Entrepreneurs Thrive (continued from page 1)
By Ernest Beck

Patrick Ellerbe, who is also currently in the program, says it allows him the space to step back from the daily grind of running his business, Pat’s Moving and Storage, to try to understand what it needs. “I am so hands on, and always working, I can only see what’s right in front of me, so this is a great asset,” he explains. His goal is to buy a building and open his own storage facility, which would allow an expansion of the business.

Nailor Simmons says the Center also helps neighborhood small business owners connect with Columbia to compete for contracts and become preferred vendors to the University. For example, the Center holds tastings for local food companies to connect them with Columbia staff that hire for food events. “We want to utilize the resources of Columbia beyond the classroom and faculty to develop the community,” she says. “Part of our job is to connect local enterprises to new business opportunities at Columbia and with government buyers and large corporations.”
Community Services

Outreach to Disconnected Youth
Columbia University has initiated outreach to identify and engage disconnected youth ages 16-24 in the local community who have not completed high school or obtained a GED in order to enroll them at no cost in New York City Department of Education (NYCDOE) high school programs or GED programs. Upon completion of a high school diploma or GED, participants will be referred for skills training, internships and work-based learning opportunities through community based organizations. Columbia will make a good faith effort to place participants in positions with Columbia University. For more information about how to access the program, please contact 212-854-1116.

Columbia Employment Information Center
The Columbia Employment Information Center (CEIC) (the “Center”) serves as the central community-based resource for local residents to apply for open positions at Columbia University. The Center provides a wide range of services to the local community including in-person and online job readiness training programs, one-on-one job-search counseling and assistance, and access to online job opportunities at Columbia.

You are welcome to call our 24-hour hotline at 212-851-1551; it provides general information about the Center, Columbia University job opportunities, information on construction activities and information on construction-related job opportunities.

Summer Sports Camp Scholarships for Children
Columbia University offers 25 need-based scholarships for children ages 6–12 from the Manhattanville area to attend Columbia’s Rise ‘n’ Cubs Summer Camp. One scholarship is equal to one week of camp. All scholarship applications must come to Columbia University through the West Harlem Development Corporation (WHDC). For more information, please contact the WHDC at 646-476-3394.

Dental Health Screenings for Senior Citizens
Columbia University offers free dental health screenings for senior citizens throughout Northern Manhattan via the ElderSmile Program. As part of Columbia University’s College of Dental Medicine Community DentCare Network, the ElderSmile Program offers free dental screenings and referrals for further dental treatment at senior centers throughout Washington Heights/Inwood and Harlem, including New York City Housing Authority (NYCHA) residents in Manhattanville Houses and General Grant Houses.

Housing Legal Assistance
For the period from January 1, 2009, through December 31, 2014, Columbia University provided funding for two attorneys at a legal assistance provider acceptable to NYCHPD serving the Manhattanville area, to provide anti-eviction/anti-harassment legal assistance for residents of the Manhattanville area. Funding will not exceed $4 million through December 31, 2030.

Mobile Dental Center for Preschool Children
Columbia University offers free dental care for preschool-age children from the Manhattanville in West Harlem area through the Mobile Dental Center. The Mobile Dental Center is a program of Columbia University’s College of Dental Medicine Community DentCare Network, which aims to reduce dental decay and improve the oral health of Northern Manhattan’s underserved children, through comprehensive dental treatment and oral health education.

Scholarships for Lifelong Learners
Columbia University provides scholarships for 50 residents of Manhattanville Houses, Grant Houses, and the local community who are 65 years of age and older to audit up to two courses per year. Administered through Columbia’s School of Continuing Education, the Lifelong Learners Program is designed for individuals committed to the principles of lifelong education.

For more information about the program, please call 212-854-0419.

Shuttle Bus Service for the Elderly and Disabled
Columbia University provides a shuttle bus service free of charge to members of the local community who are disabled or who are senior citizens (including their attendants) via the ADA-accessible Inter-campus Shuttle. The shuttle bus service complies with ADA specifications to connect the Project Site to subway stations at:

- 96th Street and Broadway
- 116th Street and Broadway (Morningside campus)
- 125th Street and Broadway
- Harlem Hospital Center (135th Street and Lenox Avenue)
- Columbia University Medical Center (168th Street and Broadway)

The shuttle bus service runs on a regular schedule throughout the day on every weekday, except on state and federal public holidays.

Columbia Community Scholars Program
Columbia University offers independent, community-based scholarships from Northern Manhattan access to a range of University services and resources not usually afforded to non-affiliated residents. Services and resources shall be provided at no cost to participants and shall include access to all of University libraries — including online access, course auditing privileges, dialogue with scholars in their field of study, and the ability to participate in seminars and social events developed specifically for the group.

For more information, please direct inquiries about the Community Scholars Program to 212-854-4289 or communityaffairs@columbia.edu.
Our Elected Officials and Community Boards

FEDERAL ELECTED OFFICIALS

Sen. Charles E. Schumer
757 Third Ave., Ste. 17-02
New York, NY 10017
Phone: 212-466-4430
TDD: 212-486-7803
Fax: 212-486-7693
www.schumer.senate.gov

Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand
780 Third Ave., Ste. 2001
New York, New York 10017
Phone: 212-688-2622
Fax: 212-688-7444
http://gillibrand.senate.gov/

Rep. Jerrold Nadler (District 8)
201 Varick St., Ste. 600
New York, NY 10014
Phone: 212-367-7350
Fax: 212-367-7356
www.house.gov/nadler

Rep. Charles B. Rangel (District 15)
Adam Clayton Powell Jr. State Office Building
165 W. 125th St., Ste. 707
New York, NY 10027
Phone: 212-663-2100
Fax: 212-663-4277
www.house.gov/rangel

LOCAL ELECTED OFFICIALS

Mayor Bill de Blasio
City Hall
New York, NY 10007
Phone: 212-788-5000
Fax: 212-788-2460
www.nyc.gov/mayor

Public Advocate Letitia James
1 Centre St., 13th Flr.
New York, NY 10017
Phone: 212-669-7200 (General)
Fax: 212-669-4701
ombudsman@publicadvocate.nyc.gov
www.publicadvocate.nyc.gov

Manhattan Borough President
Gale A. Brewer
1 Centre St., 19th Flr.
New York, NY 10002
Phone: 212-669-3435
Fax: 212-669-1701
ombudsman@publicadvocate.nyc.gov
www.publicadvocate.nyc.gov

City Council Speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito
(District 8)
105 E. 116th Street
New York, NY 10029
Phone: 212-722-6378
Fax: 212-662-4215
www.comptroller.nyc.gov

STATE ELECTED OFFICIALS

Governor Andrew M. Cuomo
State Capitol
Albany, NY 12242
Phone: 518-474-8590
Fax: 518-474-3513
www.governor.ny.gov
contact@transition.ny.gov

State Sen. Bill Perkins (District 30)
163 West 125th St., Suite 9B2
New York, NY 10027
Phone: 212-222-7315
perkins@wamn.stnys.us

State Sen. Adriano Espaillat (District 13)
5030 Broadway
New York, NY 10034
United States
Phone: 212-544-0173
Fax: 212-544-0256
espailla@senate.nys.gov
www.senate.gov/nysenate/adriano-espaillat

Assembleynumber Danial J. O’Donnell (District 69)
245 W. 104th St.
New York, NY 10025
Phone: 212-866-8700
odiamond@assembly.state.ny.us

Assembleynumber Keith T.T. Wright (District 78)
Adam Clayton Powell Jr. State Office Building
163 W. 125th St., Ste. 911
New York, NY 10027
Phone: 212-866-5089
wrightk@assembly.state.ny.us

Assembleynumber Herman D. Farrell Jr. (District 71)
2541-51
Adam Clayton Powell Jr. Blvd.
New York, NY 10031
Phone: 212-234-1430
farrellh@assembly.state.ny.us

New York City Public Advocate Letitia James

She represents you...

New York City Public Advocate Letitia James

W hen Letitia James was sworn in as New York City’s public advocate in January, she became the first woman of color to hold the position.

In her first months in office, James successfully pushed for a universal free lunch program in the public schools and to equip the city’s police force with body-worn cameras. Her office has also launched an expanded version of the city’s Wasteloads Watchlist, with significant technological upgrades.

James began her career in public service as a public defender for the Legal Aid Society and later served as an assistant attorney general for New York State. As a New York City Council member, she introduced successful legislation to ensure that thousands of families in rental buildings receive prompt and full repairs to their apartments. As chair of the Council’s sanitation committee, she pushed through a revolutionary recycling package that expanded plastic, clothing, and textile recycling, and improved recycling in public spaces.

James graduated from Columbia College with a degree in psychology and went on to earn a J.D. from Howard University Law School. She currently resides in Brooklyn, where she was born and raised.

COMMUNITY BOARDS

Community Board 7
Represents the community between the Hudson River and Central Park West from 79th Street to 110th Street; general meetings are held the first Tuesday evening of the month at the CB 7 office.
250 W. 114th Street.
New York, NY 10027
Phone: 212-362-4008
Fax: 212-395-9517
office@cb7.org
Board Chair: Elizabeth R. Caputo
District Manager: Penny Rezn
www.nyc.gov/html/mancb7

Community Board 9
Represents the community between the Hudson River and Morningside/Edgemere avenues from 106th Street to 125th Street; general meetings are held the third Thursday evening of the month at the CB 9 office.
16-18 Old Broadway
New York, NY 10027
Phone: 212-864-6200
Fax: 212-662-7396
info@cb9.org
Board Chair: Rev. Georgee Morgan-Thomas
District Manager: Eutha Prince
www.nyc.gov/html/mancb9

Community Board 10
Represents the community between Fifth Avenue and Morningside/Edgemere avenues from 106th Street to 159th Street; general meetings are held the first Wednesday evening of the month at the Adam Clayton Powell Jr. Harlem State Office Building, 163 W. 125th St., 2nd Flr.
215 W. 125th St., 4th Flr.
New York, NY 10027
Phone: 212-749-1305
Fax: 212-652-3415
mg10cb10@ch.nysenate.gov
Board Chair: Hearstta Lyle
Assistant District Manager: Andrew Lanzille
www.nyc.gov/html/mancb10

Community Board 12
Represents the community between the Hudson River and Harlem River from 155th Street to 215th Street; general meetings are held the fourth Tuesday evening of the month at the CB 12 office.
108 W. 166th St., 6th Flr.
New York, NY 10027
Phone: 212-362-8300
Fax: 212-740-8197
info@cb12.org
Board Chair: Tom F. Santagata
District Manager: Elizabeth C. T. Smith
www.nyc.gov/html/mancb12

Federal elected officials
State elected officials
Local elected officials
Community boards